AN EVE IN AUTUMN.

Twas on an eve in autumn. When the leaves were turning And behind the high hill pander The red sun had gone down. We stood beside the river, The Tennessee's blue stream, Where murmuring waves roll'd onward As peaceful as a dream.

The glittering stars above us In splender lit the skies. But brighter, ah, how brighter Waq the glad light in her eyes. I placed my arm around her, And she did not resist! My lips cought hers and found them. And, I suppose, we kitsed. 6, what were red lips made for?
For what do they exist.
If they were not intended
To kies and to be kissed?

And they'll include that passion (Deny it he who can) As long as woman's woman, As long as man is man. A blush her checks made crimson And burn, as with disgrace. And on my strong left shoulder, She hid her happy face. But she was not offended.
